ceived numerous requests to thaw frozen water pipes and mains, as the low temperatures had penetrated the earth to the level of the pipes with disastrous results. A great many of the companies receiving these requests responded by supplying the necessary material, labor and electrical energy to thaw the pipes at cost, and in some cases no charge was made for the electrical energy.

Perhaps the greatest undertaking of this kind was that of the New York Edison company in thawing a six-inch main which conveyed water from New York city to North Brother Island. This pipe had been blocked for about one month when the task of thawing it was undertaken. This pipe rests on the bed of the East river from fifty to eighty feet below the surface. A continuous application of electrical energy for five days was required to melt the ice—Popular Mechanics.
